Col. Scully Owns the Town. Another newcomer whose fame is rewas all. But when Rickard pileted the stricted to Nevada, but fresh as an alfalfa governor to Johnson's camp there was a different reception for him. The big black laid aside his violin bow, forsook the roulette wheel and jumped into his whole town, water, newspaper, bank, and fighting clothes. Then, while the governor stood by the arena, out by the cab-bage bed, Johnson did his best to exhibit Col. Mike about it. This is a story they tell of him: "When he first came to Nevada it was across the old Placerville stage road from California before the railroad over the Sierra had been linked up. When Col. Scully hit Virginia City he was sore all over. He stopped at the only house in town and looked over the bill of fare printed on the wall-it was never changed. "'What's sage hen?' grunted the new arrival. The waitress, who was one of the few women in Virginia City, told the colonel that a sage hen was a bird that lived in the sagebrush. 'Well, has it got wings?'

This enterprising company has been quietly leasing all of the vacant stores and rooms above stores in business blocks, and there they are installing a carload of cots which arrived from San Francisco to-day. For the higher taste, a cast iron washstand and a piece of petrifled soap is thrown in with the cot.

A fine large loft over a pickle factory, which contains only six cots, may be had for the aggregate price of $25 a day.
